The wife of a Florida police officer said she had to read the officer's rap sheet after police responded to a call at their house and found him passed out in the back seat of his cruiser. Habiba-Khalifa said she was confused Thursday when she arrived at the police department after her husband, a police officer with the Palm Beach Gardens Police Department, had called to say he had been injured while on duty. A police dispatcher sent officers to the home because Habiba-Khalifa said she had not seen the officer since Monday. When the first officer arrived, he told her that her husband was in the back seat of his cruiser. Habiba-Khalifa said she then asked the officer if he could see her husband. He said he couldn't because he was too short, she told the Post. "I said, 'Yes, he's home,'" she said. Khalifa said she couldn't see the officer when he got out of the cruiser. "I was really shocked," she said, adding that she thought her husband must have been injured in the line of duty. The officer said he did not know who Habiba-Khalifa was and was only "glancing at the car" when he first saw her husband, according to Khalifa. Officers gave him instructions on how to turn off the car and get out. She said the officer told her, "No, no, you stay here. I've got the keys." When she followed the officer to the car, she said she saw her husband sleeping. She said he looked like he had been drinking and was bleeding from the nose. "At first I thought it was blood and I was scared," she said. "I was afraid the officer would hit him because the car was running." Police said she would have to sign a statement saying that she read her husband's rap sheet. Palm Beach Gardens Police Chief Michael Revere told NBCNews.com that the department is investigating the matter. "Our employee followed department protocol in responding to an off-duty call. We are thoroughly investigating this matter," he said. A spokesman for the Palm Beach County Sheriff's Office told NBCNews.com that deputies received a call at around 6 p.m. requesting officers to "go to a residence in the City of Palm Beach Gardens to assist an off duty officer that had been injured."

In God's world, there's more to an understanding of ourselves and what we believe than books can tell us. "I believe we are the only species on the planet with a belief in something we cannot see, and sometimes that helps us even when life gets busy." The book at hand is Open Secrets: How the American Religious Imagination Shapes the World. The author's stated belief is that American religion affects both the political outcome and culture of the world. As an example, he cites the way that the Martin Luther King Jr. movement of the 1960's prevailed against the pro-war attitudes of some of the nation's leading churches, churches that President Lyndon Baines Johnson said were "committed to the proposition that God does not require much of human beings, nor even that they should bother to love their neighbors, and as far as we know the God in whose name the American system of government was founded is a pretty tough guy." "It was not these churches' belief in God which changed," writes Chesebrough, "but their belief in God and belief in God's courage." I think it's going to become an important voice, as more and more people in the world begin to doubt the popular fallacies of what they learned in school and see the consequences in the lives of billions of people. This is a book that will help you to see through the fog to the truth.Q: Angular 8 - How to notify other components about every change of a component's value? I created a component named ComponentA.
