XP/7/8/10:[Study on wet aerosol inhalation behavior of mice]. To investigate the impact of waveform and frequency on the wet aerosol inhalation behavior of mice. The aerosol was prepared by solidifying the lung liquid extract of the mice, and then the mice were used to test for the inhalation behavior of aerosol. The aerosol produced by an air-jet can be inhaled and deposited well in the lung of the mice. In this way, the variation of the waveform and frequency of aerosol in inhalation was defined. The bronchoalveolar lavage was useful for the measurement of the influence of the aerosol on the respiratory tract. It was possible to produce aerosol by the method described. This method, which can produce aerosol and evaluate its effects on the lung and respiratory tract, was proved to be useful for studying the mechanism of pulmonary injury and for improving the methods of aerosol inhalation.[Folate and vitamin B12 status of pregnant women in Xinjiang autonomous region]. To understand the folate and vitamin B12 status of pregnant women in the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region. A cross-sectional study was performed from June to December in 2012. A total of 623 pregnant women were randomly selected from 10 hospitals in various cities of Xinjiang. A one-stage cluster sampling method was used. Specimens were collected from participants with rapid-immuno-assay and chemiluminescence immunoassay. Concentrations of serum folate and vitamin B12 were measured
